SoSA does more ... with your help

By Steven M. Waldmann, Executive Director

For most of us the New Year offers a fresh start, a time of new beginnings, in ways big and small. I hope and trust that we all make the most of the opportunity presented to us by the turning of the calendar to a new year. History and experience tell us that by the time you are reading this newsletter most of us have already given up on or forgotten that “new beginning” we resolved to take. Whatever it was in us that saw the need and desire to seize that opportunity to start-again has probably already been replaced by the activities and realities that face us each day.

For the hungry in this country the oppressive and unrelenting reality of insufficient food and nutrition make the mere opportunity for a new start something that can only be hoped for and never received. The injustice of this should give us all pause.

The weak economy is no longer news; it is a daily reality that concerns us all. While many in our country focus on economic stimulus, the poor among us are simply focused on food and other very basic needs. Society of St. Andrew has also been focused on food. Food banks and feeding agencies across the nation have encountered historic lows in food inventories at a time when the need is greatest. While other organizations were cutting back due to economic uncertainties, SoSA was doing more. Since the economic news broke in September, SoSA has saved and distributed 90% more food than we did during the same period the previous year. We’ve continued that pace as the new year started because we know that there is such tremendous need and that there is no one else who saves and distributes highly nutritious fresh produce to the hungry on a national scale like we do and as efficiently as we do. Just 2 cents per serving!

You, obviously, are part of making that happen. SoSA has “pressed on” in these uncertain times because the need is so enormous and we know that those who support and partner with SoSA understand that need. For the poor among us, this is not the time to do less but to do far more! Through the Society of St. Andrew more is being done to ensure that highly nutritious food makes it to the tables of those who need it so much.

From the Sheep Shed

By Ken Horne, Director Emeritus

By now everyone is well aware that hard economic times are upon us. In times as hard as these two things happen to charities that serve the poor. Donations tend to go down as more and more people cut back on what they may feel are unnecessary expenditures. At the same time demand for help for the poor goes up as more and more people find it impossible to provide those very necessities for themselves. All too often charities can’t keep up with demand and the most vulnerable among us, those hardest hit by economic troubles, are forced to go hungry.

It doesn’t have to be this way. We at Society of St. Andrew are able to ramp up our gleaning to meet the increased demand. There are plenty of vegetables going to waste that could be saved from the landfill and provided to the hungry. We have a national network of volunteers and growers in place who can provide the food and see that it gets delivered to the food banks, soup kitchens and other feeding agencies that so desperately need it.

We can do all this because we are the largest and oldest produce gleaning operation in the country. We’ve been doing this for thirty years and we’ve learned over those years to save food in the most efficient, cost effective way possible. In fact, over ninety cents of every dollar donated goes directly toward the salvage, packaging and transportation of good, nutritious produce for the poor. I continue to be amazed at how much work gets done around here with so few staff people and so little in the way of overhead.

So, the good news is in all this economic misery is that we are doing something about the need, and we can do much more with additional support. So if you are a donor, or would like to become one, please be as generous as you can this winter. As you look, as we all do, at what spending you can cut back on as not essential, please remember those people who don’t have to make that choice. They can’t afford the bare essentials. We can help them, if you will help us, and together we will get through this.

SoSA responds to the cry of the recession!
Agencies across the country are making cutbacks while responding to record high requests from their clients. SoSA answered this need by providing over 3 million more pounds of nourishing food to agencies nationwide in 2008.

The Salem High School Culinary Arts department in Roanoke, Virginia gleaned over 2,800 pounds of apples this fall. These very fortunate young students were blessed to follow these apples from the trees, into the pies they learned how to bake, to the appreciative mouths of the local Rescue Mission’s clients. They also learned how to make delicious old-fashioned apple butter and gave it away to local food pantries. This project was a great way to get the students involved and connected on many levels that benefited them as well as those they served.

An early frost in North and South Carolina made for some tricky gleaning of sweet potatoes and collard greens. Gleaning of apples in the mountains of North Carolina had to be postponed due to snow! Amazingly, during the same period the previous year, gleanings were canceled due to drought. Despite constantly changing weather challenges the Carolinas increased their gleaning by 31% over 2007!

The Alabama Gleaning Network was gleaning cabbage in sub-freezing temperatures until three days before Christmas and providing a brighter Christmas to many in the Wedowee, Alabama area.

For two years, Steve Congdon has worked tirelessly to coordinate older adult volunteers from The Villages near Ocala, Florida to glean for the hungry. His enthusiasm is contagious! Steve spent the holiday weeks during Thanksgiving and Christmas not shopping and eating like most people, but coordinating gleanings with his faithful volunteers. Not only does this group glean for the hungry, but they take this wonderful food directly to the local food pantries and soup kitchens in their own community. These agencies have become dependant on Steve and his gleaners to keep them well stocked with fresh fruits and vegetables.

Weather problems in Georgia created interesting obstacles during the gleaning season but did not slow down the Georgia Gleaning Network, which salvaged almost 2 million pounds in 2008 — its first full year of operation!

Helping to alleviate the need that so many more families were experiencing in 2008, the Mississippi Gleaning Network salvaged about a million pounds of food. What a blessing to all those families that found themselves facing new, challenging situations.

The Society of St. Andrew’s Western Headquarters (SoSA West), which only opened its doors in May 2008, distributed over 300,000 pounds to 4 states that normally might not have seen as much fresh produce from SoSA: Colorado, Kansas, Missouri, and New Mexico. SoSA West salvaged peaches, tomatoes, apples, lettuce, turnips, and peppers in Missouri and Kansas and worked...

Do Something about Hunger!

By Sarah Lusk, Harvest of Hope Director

Harvest of Hope had another successful season in 2008, and I'm greatly anticipating the 2009 season! In 2008, 473 Harvester salvaged 140,300 pounds of fresh produce during 11 events. Thank you all for your hard work and desire to learn about the hunger problem in this country and around the world. There are lots of great opportunities to get involved and answer God's call to feed the hungry. Join with us at one of the 14 Harvest of Hope events this year, and let's do something about hunger together! A full listing of events and locations is available on our website. http://www.endhunger.org/hob_schedule.htm

Alternative Spring Break!

Calling all college students! Put down the books March 8-14 and come glean with us in sunny Jacksonville, FL. We'll spend the week gleaning and going more in-depth with the issue of hunger, as well as brainstorming how students can impact their own communities. Also, how does a day at the beach sound? Check out the Harvest of Hope webpage for more info: http://www.endhunger.org/hob_spring_break.htm

Phase II!

Been to a Harvest of Hope event and want to see a different side of the hunger issue? Phase II is just what you're looking for! Come join us for a week this June in Washington, D.C. to engage national and international relief organizations, and brainstorm legislation affecting hunger and poverty, and reach out in service to the poor. Applicants should be ages 15 or older who have attended at least one previous HOH event. Contact Sarah Lusk for more information at sosahoh@endhunger.org

Summer Internship

Resume submissions for Harvest of Hope's 2009 Summer Intern will be accepted now through April 1st. Applicants should be college-aged or young adults, hardworking, and dedicated to fighting hunger. Harvest of Hope experience is preferred but not required. The internship is 10 weeks during the summer and involves traveling to HOH events as well as some in-office work. Interns receive a stipend and are also housed by a host family near Big Island, VA for the duration of the job. For more information, email Sarah at sosahoh@endhunger.org

Rise to the Challenge

The Feinstein Challenge 2009

Each year the Feinstein Foundation divides $1 million among participating hunger fighting charities nationwide, using it to help them raise funds during March and April. Last year SoSA got $24,212.

The more money donated and pledged to SoSA from March 1 thru April 30, the larger a share of the $1 million we will receive. The million will be divided proportionately among all participating agencies, exponentially increasing each donor's gift! So now is the time to be as generous as possible to help stop food waste and feed the hungry! You can pledge now and pay later in the year, but please pledge before April 30. Use the coupon on the back page. Thank you!

Please Help!
Giving in Troubled Times

By Ken Bradford, Development Director

There is no escaping the fact that our economy is in the midst of the worst downturn in decades. Every day we hear about failing banks, workers losing their jobs, and homeowners losing their homes. People are worried about their shrinking retirement plans. Many are wondering how to make ends meet. And it is no wonder that in troubled economic times, the demand increases on ministries like ours that provide for the basic needs of people.

We rely heavily on the generosity of individual donors and churches for the resources necessary for us to glean America’s fields to feed America’s hungry. That makes the news from a recently published book on Christian giving somewhat disturbing. Passing the Plate, by sociologists of religion Michael Emerson, Christian Smith, and Patricia Snell, shows that very few American Christians actually are generous givers to religious and charitable causes. Perhaps the most surprising finding in the book is that the median annual philanthropic giving for an American Christian is only $200. And a startling 25% of self-identified Christians give nothing at all.

As it turns out, about 5% of American Christians provide 60% of the money churches and faith-based ministries use to operate. The lack of generosity by the balance of American Christians is even more astounding when contrasted with their incredible wealth. Passing the Plate reports that those who say their Christian faith is very important to them and those who attend church at least twice a month earn more than $2.5 trillion dollars every year. If these Christians gave away 10% of their after-tax earnings, they would add another $46 billion to ministry around the world.

The hard truth is that, as our economy travels down the long road of recovery, our hungry neighbors are going to need much more assistance than ever before. The good news is that our donors have always responded to God’s call on their lives by giving generously to our ministry even in times of economic crisis. We are grateful for their continued support as we seek to fulfill God’s command to feed the hungry in His name.

Bananas provide needed nourishment

By Marian Kelly, Potato Project Director

The fourth quarter of 2008 was an interesting three months in that we not only shipped loads of white and sweet potatoes, but we were given six loads of bananas. What a wonderful treat for our feeding agencies! In years past the old adage, “an apple a day keeps the doctor away,” has almost turned into “a banana a day keeps the doctor away.” Many folks, especially our seniors, are on medications that deplete their potassium levels and they are encouraged to eat bananas on a regular basis. These donated bananas had at least a week of life left in them, so there was plenty of fruit to be distributed. No, we are not going to become the “Banana Project,” but will continue to operate as the “Produce Project,” fondly known as the “Potato Project.”

During this last quarter of the year we salvaged and distributed over 2.5 million pounds of fresh nutritious produce to agencies across the country.

A prime example of one of our successful potato drops was a drop made in Richland, Iowa in November. I worked with Bill Anderson from Prairie View UMC to organize the event. 43 organizations, churches, and food banks were invited to participate in the event. Some of the volunteers were young people from a confirmation class who used the experience as their service project. Mr. Anderson recently wrote in an email about the event: “We had never seen such joy and compassion and caring as we witnessed on November 8.”

During 2008, 21 food & produce donors from 15 different states helped us serve 104 agencies in 32 states. Over 11 million pounds of excess food was donated to the Society of St. Andrew and was re-routed to agencies all across the country. Once again, it is proven that when all of us work together, a difference is made.
SoSA marks 30 years of hunger ministry
BY CAROL A. BREITINGER, COMMUNICATIONS DIRECTOR

This year the Society of St. Andrew marks the 30th anniversary of its founding. There have been many milestones and successes along the way. However, over the years, whenever co-founder Ken Horne was asked what SoSA’s goals were, he would immediately reply, “to work ourselves right out of a job – and that will happen when there is no more hunger in America.”

We may not be out of a job yet, but there is no doubt that during these 30 years SoSA has dramatically raised the national level of awareness of domestic hunger. SoSA has been recognized by Congress, the United States Department of Agriculture, state legislatures, other national hunger organizations, and many church denominations for its contribution to fighting hunger in America.

Indeed, before SoSA came on the scene and began gleaning and shipping large quantities of excess fresh produce to critical feeding agencies around the nation, this type of hunger-relief work was simply not being done. Perfectly good food was going to waste to the tune of 96 billion pounds a year. SoSA demonstrated that fresh food salvage could be done efficiently and economically, and our example has spawned many “copy cat” programs over the years. These, taken as a whole and combined with our present efforts, now deliver over a quarter of a billion pounds of produce each year to agencies that feed the poor! Yet there is so much more that still needs to be done. Join SoSA in continuing the fight against hunger until we work ourselves out of a job!

A few highlights and milestones from the past 30 years:

- Start of SoSA’s Potato Project in 1983 – the beginning of bulk fresh food salvage in the United States.
- 1.7 billion servings of nutritious food have been provided to the nation’s hungry.
- United States Department of Agriculture presented SoSA with its Hero of Food Recovery & Gleaning Award at its first National Summit on Food Recovery & Gleaning in 1997.
- The United Methodist Church adopted a resolution during its 2008 General Conference commending the “Society of St. Andrew as a partner organization with the United Methodist Church in the alleviation of hunger in the United States”.
- SoSA opened regional offices in North Carolina, Florida, Texas, Alabama, Mississippi, and its Western Headquarters in Kansas City, Missouri.

Watch for more SoSA successes and milestones in future newsletters.
